

EUROPE SAFE FROM EPIDEMIC

Spread of Disease From Russia
Can Be Checked, Says
Paris Doctor.

By WILFRED FLEISHER
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

PARIS. (By Mail.)—The spread of an epidemic in Russia in the wake of the great famine does not threaten Western Europe, in the opinion of Doctor Roux, head of the Pasteur Institute. Medical science has made such progress that epidemics can be checked and great catastrophes such as visited Europe in the Middle Ages can be averted.

"I believe," said Doctor Roux, "that we know enough about such epidemics as typhus, cholera and plague to protect our frontiers. Germany and Poland are the countries which face the greatest task, as they are in first line, and in their hands mainly lies the responsibility for the security of Western Europe."

"The best course open to the nations of Western Europe is to associate themselves with the international relief work already on foot, and particularly to keep close watch along the Russian-Polish frontier."

"Refugees who are infected or may be bearers of germs should be thoroughly cleansed, and suspected cases should be kept under surveillance for a certain period. Typhus is only carried by lice, and plague by fleas, and once these are removed, the victim is no longer a source of danger to his neighbor."

"As for cholera, vaccination is an effective preventive. It rendered great services during the war to the Greek, Romanian and French armies in the Near East. Typhus vaccination cannot be very widely used, as no method has yet been found of breeding the typhus microbe and the serum must be taken from infected persons, which, of course, limits the amount of serum available."

RECRUITING FOR ARMY SERVICE BEGINS AGAIN

Capt. Pierce Niedermeyer of Battery B Authorized to Take Enlistments—Standard Higher.

Circulars have been received by all army posts, camps and stations from the War Department to the effect that enlistments are again to be accepted in the army.

No general recruiting stations are to be established at this time. Recruiting will be conducted at the various posts, stations and camps throughout the country. From these parties of officers and men are to be sent to nearby towns and cities in search of the best young men who wish to enter the army.

Young men under the age of eighteen years will not be accepted, and it is directed that recruiting forces investigate the statements of candidates for enlistment, and verify them before the men are accepted. Men who cannot read and write English are not desired.

"When the candidate faces the doctor he will find the tests difficult for any but a well-nigh perfect man to pass," reads the Secretary of War's circular. "All recruiting parties have been notified that special regulation sixty-five and one-half of the war department will be rigidly enforced. He must see and hear well, his heart must stand the stress of physical exertion; he must be intelligent enough to execute military maneuvers, to obey commands and protect himself."

The circular says further that the standard of men obtained will be the highest the army has ever had.

Any man who is re-enlisting must enter for three years, while the man who has not served an enlistment may choose between one and three years. The circular concludes with the statement that a man may apply for enlistment to the nearest post, camp or station. Under this circular, Captain Pierce Niedermeyer, Commander of Battery B, is authorized to accept enlistments.

Think of "Male and Female." Of "Why Change Your Wife." Of "Forbidden Fruit." Then try to imagine a story greater than any of these—stronger, more unusual, more thrilling.

Imagine scores of settings, every one of them more elaborate, more daring, more luxurious than anything you have ever seen on the screen.

Now imagine twelve of the best-known players in America, working under the magic direction of DeMille.

If you can imagine one superlative picture with all this—and more—you will have a slight idea of "The Affairs of Anatol."

A vivid, tingling drama of love and marriage. Glowing with luxury. Piquant with gay adventure. Played by stars enough for ten pictures!
